ACES ON BRIDGE

By Bobby Wolff. Today's pearl was played years ago by Raphael Cohen, Hungary's grand master. Look at all four hands and see whether you can discover the unusual play he found to score his slam. East's butt-in of two spades produced the lead that caused a problem for Cohen. Without a spade lead, Cohen could have succeeded by establishing dummy's diamonds via a ruff (the heart nine is the entry) and then, after trumps are pulled, leading to dummy's spade ace to run the diamonds. How did Cohen make the slam against the spade lead? He took dummy's ace and went for his only chance: the club ace. Cohen cashed dummy's top diamonds and discarded two clubs, the king and queen! Next he ruffed a diamond high to establish the suit, and then he drew trumps. This left West with only his club suit, and with that familiar sinking feeling, West knew he was about to become a helpless victim. When Cohen led his last club toward dummy's J-2, West had to surrender. If he took his ace, he would have to lead to dummy's club jack and the good diamonds. And if West ducked the ace, Cohen would win dummy's jack and make an overtrick.
